Eventos do CIDEHUS / Events organized by CIDEHUS:

- 1) Arquivo da Sé de Portalegre: organização, descrição e difusão online
Terminou em Dezembro de 2014 o projecto Arquivo da Sé de Portalegre: organização, descrição e difusão online que tinha sido iniciado em Junho de 2013. Este projecto foi um dos vencedores do apoio da Fundação Calouste Gulbenkian na edição de 2012 do concurso para Projectos de Recuperação, Tratamento e Organização de Acervos Documentais e resultou de uma candidatura apresentada pelo CIDEHUS-UÉ, em parceria com o Cabido da Sé de Portalegre. O projecto foi elaborado e executado por Fátima Farrica com a colaboração de Ana Caeiro (responsável pela documentação musical). A intervenção permitiu a organização, a inventariação (em <http://fundis.cidehus.uevora.pt>) e o acondicionamento da documentação.

5) The Cultural Turn in History

Prazo limite: 30.Junho.2015

Link: <http://www.unibuc.ro/facultati/istorie/anale-istorie/>

The shift of emphasis in recent decades from the grand political narratives or the serialization of quantitative data to the meaning of words, gestures, and representations has radically transformed history, along with its neighbouring disciplines in the humanities and the social sciences. This 'cultural turn' that emerged in the 1970s has not only provided for a whole new range of research approaches that became increasingly interdisciplinary, but has also made us aware of the changing and sometimes contested connotations conveyed by artefacts and records. However, this has not been without its tensions, as our discipline was faced with the dilemmas arising from the failure of paradigms and the disputes over the very scientific character thereof. Issue 1/2015 of Analele Universității din București – Istorie aims to explore some of the consequences of these developments, by encouraging both theoretical overviews, as well as empirical case studies. Papers are invited on questions such as:

- Cultural history and its neighbours
- Challenges of the 'cultural turn'
- Collective identities and the self
- Emotions in history and the arts
- Memory, remembrance, representations of the past
- Social status and cultural consumption
- Mass communication and popular entertainment
- The cultural history of intellectual practices

AUB-Istorie is the biannual, peer-reviewed, interdisciplinary, academic journal, issued by the Faculty of History, University of Bucharest since 1956. Published biannually, the journal aims to bring together historians, political scientists and sociologists in order to create a forum for intellectually stimulating and interdisciplinary debate. AUB-Istorie is available online through the EBSCO database.

Language of Publication: Articles may be written in English or in French.

Submissions are encouraged from both early career and established scholars.

Submitted papers should neither have been previously published, nor be under consideration for publication elsewhere. AUB-Istorie operates a double-blind refereeing process for evaluating the originality, quality and relevance of the submitted papers.

We also welcome reviews of recent books in the fields of history and neighbouring disciplines.

Please address your manuscripts and all other correspondence to

6) Present Tense: A Journal of Rhetoric in Society announce a special issue centering on Race, Rhetoric, and the State

In response to the urgent situation of states around the world treating their citizens of color in problematic ways, Present Tense: A Journal of Rhetoric in Society is excited to announce a special issue centering on Race, Rhetoric, and the State to be published in the fall of 2015.

Recent troubling, state-influenced events around the world regarding issues of race and violence have had traumatic, and sometimes deadly, impact. Some of these events include: two juries' decisions to exonerate police for the killings of Michael Brown and Eric Garner; a police officer's brutal assault and arrest of Professor Ersula Ore; thousands of unaccompanied illegal immigrant children being indefinitely detained by the American government; a Congressional giving-away of Apache lands to an Australian mining company; the rise of global anti-immigration nativism in relation to climate refugees. As rhetoricians, we have cause to interrogate and investigate these questionable actions and consider the role of the state as a perpetrator and enforcer of violence. What galvanizes our aim with this special issue is the increasing call by scholars across disciplines for academic communities to critically engage violence and repression committed by and on behalf of the state. In essence, we seek to explore the ways in which the structures of the state (e.g., cultural, legal, political, religious) explicitly and implicitly normalize violence against communities of color. Issue editors Alexandra Hidalgo and Donnie Johnson Sackey invite submissions on the following topics, as well as others that respond to states around the world treating people of color in questionable ways:

- Police Brutality Against Communities of Color
- Immigration Law and Dehumanization of Illegal Immigrants
- The French Government's Response to Charlie Hebdo Attacks (e.g., anti-semitism; islamophobia)
- Violence Against Indigenous Peoples (e.g. Idle No More, environmental racism)
- State Violence Directed at Women of Color (e.g., compulsory sterilization)
- Incarceration and State Violence in the Criminal Justice System and For-Profit Prisons
- Settler Colonialism and Other Forms of Neo-Colonialism
- The Canadian Government's Lack of Response to Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women
- Religious Violence Perpetuated by the State
- Material Conditions of Marginality Among Communities of Color
- Redefinitions of Torture and Guantanamo Bay
- Media Representations of People of Color as Criminal/Threatening or Helpless Victims
- Systemic and State-Influenced Racial Digital Divides
- Racially-Driven Virtual Violence in Social Media and Gaming
- Racial Inequality in the War on Drugs

Please send your submissions to ptspecialissue@gmail.com by July 1, 2015. Present Tense articles are no longer than 2,500 words. We are particularly interested in articles that engage with digital media (video, podcasts, slidecasts). If you have any questions about whether a piece would be a good fit for this issue, please email us at ptspecialissue@gmail.com.

In recent years, countries and political entities across the globe--Egypt, India, the United States, Hong Kong, and Scotland, to name a few--have witnessed fierce contestation over the limits of democracy and civil society in a shifting global political landscape. The UC Irvine History Graduate Student Association is seeking papers and panel ideas from all disciplines for this year's conference on the theme of negotiating the public sphere: rethinking history from below. This conference aims to promote fruitful exchange and reflection on the role of the public sphere around the world, past and present, and its use in promoting policy change, critical awareness, and international dialogue.

Those interested in participating in the conference should submit a 300-word abstract by February 1 to Sarah Mellors at smellors@uci.edu. Be sure to include your name and institutional affiliation. Though travel funds are not available through the history department, visiting presenters may be offered on-campus accommodation.

Modes of Silence in the Seventeenth- and Eighteenth-Century Anglo-American World

Defining silence seems to pose a challenge to lexicographers in the contemporary period as it did in the early modern era. According to OED, silence is a “complete absence of sounds; the fact or state of abstaining from speech”, while Phillips’s New World of Words: Or, A Universal English Dictionary (1700) suggests that silence is “oppos’d to noise, crys and tumult”, as if silence could only be understood negatively in its relation to sounds or speech. Silence is ineffable; it imposes itself on us. It is celebrated by popular wisdom: virtuous men know how to keep silent whereas vain wits engage in endless prattling. The way the two Roman goddesses of silence, Angerona and Tacita, are typically represented can be read as a warning to all those who cannot remain silent: the former is often shown with a finger on her lips, urging us not to speak, while the latter is depicted with her tongue ripped off as a punishment for her garrulity.

The Bible presents silence in an ambiguous fashion: the Psalmist orders liars and slanderers of all stripes to be silent but begs God not to hold his peace. For the congregation silence is a prelude to the reception of the Word of God as mediated by those who have been entrusted with it: John Donne’s sermons, like Paul’s, it seems, had the power of imposing silence. Ecclesiastes says that there is “a time to keep silent, and a time to speak”. It is common knowledge that monastic silence was a rule of thumb as well as a living ideal, making it possible for contemplation to emerge from the exertions of an active life.

Not holding one’s peace, however, is sometimes a moral or political necessity, when it comes to thwarting conspiracies or denouncing misdeeds. In that case, silence is more dangerous or more reprehensible than speech. When speech becomes subversive and threatens institutional order and existing hierarchies, silencing political or religious opposition as well as dissenting voices becomes a priority for established authorities, sometimes even to the point of obsession. The repression of dissent is carried out in a number of ways, not least through censorship.

The aim of this conference is to explore modes of silence, understood as the voluntary or involuntary renunciation of speech, in the seventeenth- and eighteenth-century Anglo-American world. Various approaches covering a wide range of disciplines are welcome: literature, art history, history of religion, politics and science, history of the book. The organisers will especially value papers that study the dynamics of silence and speech. Silence may be a voluntary renunciation of speech when in sermons or sacred poetry it gives way to the voice of God. It may also result from the realisation that language is inherently flawed, thus making it possible for speakers to challenge the linguistic and rhetorical conventions of their time. Censorship may impose silence and may sometimes lead writers to try and elude or circumvent the censors.
